

Intuitive-Conceptual

Intuitive-Conceptual thinkers are skilled in identifying associations and patterns. They are able to draw inferences, clarify complex situations and uncover underlying causes. Their thinking is an intuitive process involving fusion (and friction) between ideas and inklings. Internally energized, they are primarily introspective and less socially interested. Often convinced of their own unorthodox views, they pursue self-defined goals with confidence and resolve. Very high scorers may be quick to see others as incompetent, or to blame them when something fails.

Maverick

Mavericks want autonomy and freedom from the control of others. Their values and lifestyle are typically unconventional and uninhibited. Some are spontaneous and impulsive; others are more sophisticated and complicated. While often headstrong and impatient, they may be imaginative, daring, and clever people with wide interests. They seem to march to their own drum, assertive and self-reliant.

Self-Confident

Self-confident people believe in themselves and win the confidence of others. Secure and assured, they are not easily swayed by someone else's arguments or persuasions. They believe in their own abilities, strengths and powers and are not burdened by doubts, and low self-esteem. They do what they believe to be right. Genuinely confident people are able to admit and learn from mistakes, and to accept compliments graciously.

Lover of Wisdom & Knowledge

Lovers of wisdom acquire and apply knowledge skillfully. They tend to think things through from multiple angles and are ready to reconsider in light of new facts. Knowledge and experience must influence the heart and mind in order to bring about Wisdom. These individuals are usually in touch with their inner life, and they value personal development. Their pursuits will often include: purpose and meaning in life, excellence and living well, others' happiness and well-being, and the integration of actions and beliefs for authentic living.
